And wherever the Star-Child led them they followed, and whatever the Star-Child bade them do, that did they. And when he pierced with a sharp reed the dim eyes of the mole, they laughed, and when he cast stones at the leper they laughed also. And in all things he ruled them, and they became hard of heart, even as he was.

Star-Child is a piece written in 1977 for orchestra and voices by the American composer George Crumb. Harold C. Schonberg of The New York Times said of the work, "Star-Child is sensitive, powerful, full of personality, and it marks a significant step in Mr. Crumb's development". This is big music and even passionate music. In a way, it is a synthesis both of what Mr. Crumb has been doing ...
